Peek Inside the Book

Your life, sir, is propelled by a dream of the fear of having nightmares; your loves the fear of being alone; your world's history the fear of a possible leap by a possible antagonist out of a possible shadow, or a not-improbable skeleton out of your dead-certain cupboard. Christopher Fry, The Lady's Not for Burning //

We are all of us lost. The best we can do is make whatever we're lost in as much like home as we can. Christopher Fry, The Lady's Not for Burning //

Reader's Opinions

THE LADY'S NOT FOR BURNING. (1949). Christopher Fry. *. This was Fry's first big hit for the stage, both in the UK and on Broadway. It is written, as you might expect, in blank verse, but flows beautifully, both as a silent read and when read aloud. It is a comedy, though more a comedy of errors than one of general humor. It is about...

I read this play ages ago (it seems) because Dean mentions it in "Tam Lin". This is your typical British romantic play, where a thousand incredulous things are all happening at once complete with humorous miscommunication, and ends with an even number of happy...
